Lightwedge Reading Light

Are you tempted to knit in the dark? If we could only read the pattern once in a while, car trips at night would seem shorter. Likewise, reading in bed while your significant other is trying to sleep is a lose-lose situation. You don't have enough light to read well, and that small amount of light is still way too much for him to sleep through.

The Lightwedge is a solution to our common problem. The optical-grade acrylic lens has its own battery-powered light. It fits into a book and lights just the page you are reading, with little overflow. A soft microfiber case keeps scratching the lens to a minimum. I've given this a try, and it's my new favorite reading pal. Sized for hardcover and paperback books, you'd better get two because no one will want to share this find! Several colors and styles are offered. Retail for $25-$40.

Check them out online at www.lightwedge.com, www.greatpointlight.com or (877) 777-9334.
